DLF Macro Economic Research

Sustainable solutions to the unemployment problem with sustainable growth. Solution to the refugees problem. Solution to the youth unemployment problem, no lost generation. Less crime. More people meaningful at work.

Recently finished research on the traditional Solow growth model shows that the implementation of capital and labor augmented progress has been wrong implemented and interpreted. This research is of importance to all banks, Central banks and institutions that use growth models or DSGE models. For an abstract and conclusions see the economy page. The research has also serious consequences for endogenous growth models and it offers new insight how to handle this phenomena.
